Justin Madsen

DSC530

Shankar Parajulee

Exercise 2-1

Based on the data at hand in chapter 2, it is hard to summarize if first babies are born later than other babies. Data sets are not equally represented. However, just comparing the two variables seems to indicate that most of all babies are born around the same time, first babies are comparable to other babies before the 39-week mark, and they are also more prevalent than other births after the 40 week mark.